Fact sheet:
Clovis Community Medical Center

Background

Clovis Community Medical Center has grown in scope and reputation since its establishment in 1965 as the 35-bed, acute-care Clovis Memorial Hospital at DeWitt and Sierra avenues in Clovis, Calif.

In 1979, the hospital merged with the then-Fresno Community Hospital, and in 1982, Clovis Memorial Hospital’s name changed to Clovis Community Hospital. Clovis residents, merchants, volunteers and others continued with fundraising efforts and personal contributions for future expansion and equipment needs.

In 1988, Clovis Community Hospital opened at its current location on the northeast corner of Herndon and Temperance avenues. The acclaimed medical center provides care and healing in a serene environment. Now known as Clovis Community Medical Center, the hospital is often Valley residents’ first choice for women’s services, advanced surgeries and comprehensive care.

The Clovis Outpatient Care Center was built in 2002 and is one of the busiest outpatient surgery centers in the area, performing more than 770 surgeries a month in its 10 operating rooms. A dedicated endoscopy suite was completed in a 2009 expansion which included a six-bay, pre-operative area, four procedure rooms, private family conference area and private exit with reserved patient pick-up area.

Breast care services also were expanded to allow the Marjorie E. Radin Breast Care Center to continue meeting the unique needs of women while setting a new standard of care for breast health. Here, advanced technology and medical leaders in breast care have come together in a welcoming, comfortable environment. The Radin Breast Care Center has been designated as a Center of Excellence by both the American College of Radiology and the National Quality Measures for Breast Centers.

Clovis Community expansion

To meet the area’s growth, Clovis Community embarked on a massive $300 million expansion and renovation project in 2008 focused on inpatient expansion.

This expansion and renovation have nearly doubled the hospital’s capacity to 208 private rooms – making Clovis Community the only comprehensive hospital in the area with all-private rooms. In addition, the Clovis Community expansion has created more than 2,500 construction jobs since it began.
